Today’s Agenda

• Introduction to the Question Bank (download: as.pn/questionbank)

• Practitioner perspective with Tonya Cody-Robinson, Business Relations Specialist, Chicago Cook Workforce Partnership

• Practitioner perspective with Ellen Johnson, Director of the Frontline Focus Training Institute, Chicago Jobs Council

• Discussion

• Polling questions

• The webinar is being recorded. We will post the recording and PowerPoint deck on our website.
• Launched in 2016 with support from the Walmart Foundation, the initiative explores ways to enhance stability and improve mobility for the retail workforce.

Reimagine Retail

• We work closely with partners in six regions across the country testing strategies to support job quality and advancement for retail workers:
  • Pittsburgh, Phoenix, Chicago, San Francisco, Philadelphia, and San Diego

• As we learn alongside our partners, we document promising practices and develop new publications and tools to strengthen the field.
Question Bank Tool: Background & Organization

II. Questions About Employee Engagement, Development, and Advancement (p. 5)
III. Questions About Compensation and Scheduling (p. 6)

How to Use This Tool

You can use this tool to find questions that help you learn about a business with an eye toward providing workforce services. Or you might pick questions from the tool to help you identify retailers that are a good fit for the job-seekers you serve. Using the tool to ask questions and learn about a large number of businesses in your region can help you develop expertise about industry norms and practices. This can give you the confidence and standing to talk with with what they tell you. This strategy can be effective not only for identifying and challenging your assumptions, but also for preparing you to participate actively in discussions with a retailer.

Let the Conversation Guide Your Questions

When you take a look at the Question Bank, you’ll see that there are far too many questions to ask anybody in one session! You should pick and choose a mix of questions based on your objectives, the stage of your Question Bank Tool

I. Questions to Understand the Business and Its Workforce

Questions in this category help you develop an understanding of the business and its workforce practices, and to start to get to know the manager you are speaking with. Listen for information about how this manager thinks about attracting and retaining talent. What is the manager most proud of, and are there human resources challenges that your organization may be able to help address? This conversation can also help you understand the structure of the business and the types of decisions this store manager has authority to make.

Opening Question:

Tell me about your business and your workforce.

Potential Follow-Up Questions:

How do you describe your brand and target customer?

Why do people want to work for your company?

Who does well here? (what types of experiences, expectations, personalities)

Tell me how you hire staff. Who and how do you recruit? What is involved in screening (application process, assessments or work-based tests)?

Who are your major competitors for workers?
II. Questions about Employee Engagement, Development and Advancement

These questions help you learn about how this company provides opportunities for workers to learn, grow and contribute feedback and ideas. It is common to hear about retail managers who started at entry-level and advanced within a company; you may even learn that the manager you’re speaking with started in an entry-level role. Because the typical mix of employees in a store is heavily concentrated at entry-level, probing can help you learn more about what it takes for a worker to advance. This line of inquiry may also help you learn about ways that workforce services could help a retailer meet goals for internal promotion and improve retention.

Opening Question:

How long have you worked here and what’s been your path to this job? Can you describe the typical path to moving up in the company?

Potential Follow-Up Questions:

- How do you learn about your employees’ satisfaction at work? What have you learned?
- Can you tell me about training that new workers receive in the store(s)?
- Is it a goal to cross-train workers? What’s going well and what has been challenging?
- Who does on-the-job training? Do you have designated trainers?
- Are there new skills your workers need to help your business remain competitive in the face of technology or industry shifts? What are they?
III. Questions about Compensation and Scheduling

Compensation and scheduling may be sensitive topics for retail managers. At the same time, this information can help you assess the fit of this company’s employment practices for your job-seekers’ needs, enabling you to refer workers who will stay and succeed. As you probe, tread gently, and listen for indication of what the manager does and does not have control over. For example, policies set by headquarters (such as just-in-time scheduling software or surprise merchandise promotions) may lead to staffing up on short notice.

Once you’ve established rapport, see if this manager is open to conversations about staffing and scheduling practices that promote retention. For example, some firms that prioritize customer service try to operate with slack,⁷ and always have enough staff on hand⁸ to be responsive to customers. As you have conversations with different retailers, you’ll be in a position to help them learn about how their wages, benefits, and scheduling compare with others’ and how this affects their ability to hire and retain the workforce they need.

A number of states and cities have recently introduced new laws regulating wages and scheduling practices. Businesses anticipating or adapting to new regulations may be particularly interested in information about strategies and tools⁵ to enhance their workforce practices to improve productivity (such as stable scheduling apps).⁶

Opening Question:

Where does an entry-level worker typically start in terms of position, shift schedule, wages and benefits?

Potential Follow-Up Questions:

What’s the mix of full-time and part-time workers in your store(s)?

What’s the work cadence in your store? When are workload peaks in a typical week? Are you busiest on weekends?

What is the process of going from part-time to full-time? How about from seasonal to regular part-time or full-time?
Plan for Retail Seasonality

As you plan to use this tool and engage retailers, remember to consider the seasonality of the retail year. Retailers may be more available and interested in partnership in some months than others. Typically, the retail fiscal calendar runs from February 1 to January 31, and the holiday season (from October to January) is the busiest time of year. Planning for new workforce investments usually occurs during the annual budgeting process ahead of the fiscal year start. Calendars can differ depending on the type of retailer—for example home and garden retailers have different peak seasons than department stores or grocery retailers. Consider asking retailers about their calendar and planning conversations at the times when they can be most receptive.
