ASPEN INSTITUTE NAMES TEN FINALISTS FOR 2015 ASPEN PRIZE FOR COMMUNITY COLLEGE EXCELLENCE

*Winner to be Announced in March 2015
$1 Million Prize for Excellence in Four Areas:
Learning, Degree Completion, Graduates' Employment and Earnings, and Success for Minority and Low-Income Students*

Washington, D.C., September 4, 2014 – The Aspen Institute announced today the ten finalists for the 2015 Aspen Prize for Community College Excellence, the nation's preeminent recognition of high achievement and improvement in America's community colleges. Three states – Florida, Texas, and Washington – each have two schools in the running for the award. \*see complete list of Finalists below***

The Prize, awarded every two years, recognizes outstanding institutions selected from an original pool of more than 1,000 community colleges. With a singular focus on student success, the Prize assesses community colleges' achievements in four areas: student learning, certificate and degree completion, high rates of employment and earnings for graduates, and high levels of access and success for minority and low-income students.

“After three years of administering this prize, we've learned that even the colleges facing the biggest challenges are able to dramatically and continuously improve student education,” said Joshua Wyner, Executive Director of the Aspen Institute College Excellence Program and author of What Excellent Community Colleges Do. “These institutions offer lessons for other colleges about how entire institutions can increase the amount students learn so they graduate and get good jobs. Ultimately, these community colleges prove that the goals of open access and student success can be attained within the same educational setting.”

Through the Prize, the College Excellence Program has gathered and published a unique set of data and qualitative assessments that point the way for community colleges aiming to dramatically improve student success.

The success of our nation's community colleges is more important than ever before. Nearly half of all college students attend community college, with more than seven million students – youth and adult learners – working toward degrees and certificates. This includes rapidly growing numbers of lower-income and minority students.

By 2018, 60 percent of American jobs will require some kind of post-secondary education. And constrained family budgets and mounting student debt—which recently surpassed $1 trillion nationally—will only serve to increase the appeal of community colleges. With average tuition of about $3,000 per year per student – less than half the average at public four-year colleges and less than 10 percent of what is now charged by top private four-year colleges and universities – community colleges offer a uniquely affordable path straight to a job or an on-ramp to a bachelor’s degree.

The Selection Process

Aspen’s Finalist Selection Committee, comprised of former community college presidents, respected researchers and policy experts, selected the ten finalist institutions after reviewing extensive data on performance and improvements in learning, graduation, workforce outcomes, and equitable outcomes for all students, focusing on those in traditionally underserved racial/ethnic groups—African American, Hispanic/Latino and Native American—and those from low-income backgrounds. Of the 150 institutions named eligible in January, over one hundred applied to compete for the Prize.

This fall, the Aspen Institute will conduct site visits to each of the ten finalist institutions. Following a rigorous review process, a distinguished Prize Jury will select a grand prize winner and up to four finalists-with-distinction to be announced in March 2015. The 2013 Aspen Prize for Community College Excellence was awarded to Santa Barbara City College (California) and Walla Walla Community College (Washington). In 2011, Valencia College (Florida) was the inaugural Prize winner. According to the Prize rules, former winners were not eligible to reapply for this cycle.

The Aspen Prize Finalists selected today reflect the diversity and richness of American community colleges – from the large El Paso Community College in El Paso, Texas, with a majority Latino student body of 40,000, to the small-town Lake Area Technical College in Watertown, South Dakota with 1,700 students, to the urban, ethnically diverse Eugenio María de Hostos Community College, part of the City University of New York and located in the South Bronx, the nation’s poorest congressional district.
